Safari Magazine is a magazine published by a non-profit organization, Safari International Inc., that focuses on trends in art, design, lifestyle and travel from around the world from the perspective of Indian-Americans. The magazine was launched in 2007 after five years of research by Anu Ghanwani, a former copywriter at Procter & Gamble, who has been involved with various arts and cultural organizations since 1990. Safari had a circulation of 22,000 copies in its first year with a print run of 2,500 copies. In 2009 Safari Magazine sent its first international edition to the United Arab Emirates with a circulation of 4,000 copies. In 2013 its circulation was over 30,000. In 2013 it became the only magazine from the Indian-American community to be included by Time Inc. as part of their "Time 100" list for impact and excellence in global media. The 2013 issue of Safari Magazine was edited by Anu Ghanwani and features an interview with best-selling author, Mitch Albom. The cover is designed by Inder Malhotra and features a photograph of the San Francisco skyline.
